There can be no doubt that Mr. Justice Anstey. is "detected" by the Times of India; but that journal is prudent enough to tomper its detestation with a good deal of respect for his Lordship's powers of offence and defence; and, while oarefully avoiding a direct encounter with the new Judge our contemporary waits for him (as it ward) HOUSES, at the corners of the streets and tries to trip him o as he passes by, or runs after him yelping and barking at his heels, secure in the consciousness that such audacity will only be treated with se--one contempt. There are a set of critics who, as Sir Walter, Scott finely said of Byron's defamers, seem to think that the telescope was only invosted in order to enable men to see the spots on the Divisions, from the front to the Rear part of sun; and so the Times of India resolutely refuses it is Six hundred feet with Drawing-rooms, State on notice Mr. Austry's good qualities as a Judge. Dignity is certainly to be admired when it is associated with high ability and independence: but we can easily have too much of it, when, as not unfrequently happens in Hombay it, is merely used as a cloak for dulness. It must be conceded that Mr. Justice Anstay's Schooners can be brought to Auchor, even at acerbity of temper now and then betrays him into the abb tide. A part or whole of the House can employing an excessive severity of language and be had as suitable to the Renter. manner that he himself probably, in his cooler moments, regrets! but there is a wild flavour of originality in those shrewd sharp sayings of his that the newspapers love to report, which is intensely relished by the public. It is remarkable, too, that, with all his seeming hasteness, Mr. Justice Anstey is hardly ever in the wrong. All thorough paced reformers are detested by the quiet conservatives whose ease they distrob; and Mr. Anstey has of course raised up against himself a host of cuemies among the crowd of officials who enjoyed that laxity of procedure in the High Court which the new Judge is bent on replacing by a system of wholesome rigour. But he his invalnerable by his loss, for the simple reason that he makes it a rule to have justice and common sante on his side. What for instance could be more reasonable than the rebuke which his Lordship crms administered the other day to a counsel who had missed an important point in a case because his attention was distracted from the business before the Court by some remarks in opportunely made to him by a solicitor ! His Lordship said that, when he practised at the Bar, he always, made a point of snubbing any one who spoke to him while he was engaged in the conduct of a case, and that no doubt he was detested for baving done so. Evidently the principle for which Mr. Justice Anstey contends is the correct one, for a counsel ennot hope to do his duty to his client unless, he concentrates his andivided attention on the case and watches with anxious bare every step in its progress through the Court; and the counsel who was rebuked, being a sensible man, frankly ad mitted that the Judge was right. The Times of India, however, exulting chooses as a text for a leading article Mr. Justice Anstey's own admission that he " was and probably " is still detested." Yes: but "detested" by whom? By the I by Messre. Mansu & Co., with or without downs by the Praya No. 40, between Messre. attorneys and their clerks, not by the suitors. It Godowns, is clear that the latter liked Mr. Anstey's principle of potsponing all other considerations to the interests of his clients; for they flocked to him in crowds without casting a glance upon barristers who had nothing to recommend them but their extreme courtesy to every one with whom they did business. The native millers confining themselves still exclusively to the preparation of table rice for local consumption and the steam-ricemilis not having commenced work, we have as yet to give no quotations for the different qualities of rice suitable for export. SUGAR -The stocks are exhausted, and we cannot expect supplies of now White Sugar before January and of Brown before February next. The reports regarding the coming crop are not so favorable as first expected and we fear prices during the coming season also will rule high. In the absence of stocks we have no quotations to give to-day.
